particles: graphene-mediated synergistic effect for photocatalytic H₂ production from water. We report a facile, green and efficient method for the preparation of stable rutile TiO₂-C nano-particles from TiC phase with well-dispersed graphene which can be easily prepared at ambient temperature. A synergistic effect was achieved due to the interactions between TiO₂ and

C when graphene was utilized, and the as-prepared TiO₂-C nano-particles exhibit high photocatalytic H₂ generation rate toward photocatalytic water splitting. Optical frequency combs generated by self-phase modulation in dispersion-engineered fiber resonators. We demonstrate a novel design approach of synthesizing optical frequency combs that provides robust comb generation over a wide spectral bandwidth. The technique uses an intracavity dispersion-engineered fiber resonator to generate broad intracavity pulses, generating a comb of optical harmonics. Using the polarimetric output detection technique to fully characterize the generated ultrafast comb, we demonstrate comb generation with a line-to-line spacing of up to 1.2 nm

(3,000 comb lines) and corresponding linewidth of ≈ 65 MHz for a 9.6 GHz repetition rate. Furthermore, by employing this technique, we can generate a comb with stability for more than 20 minutes. We believe that this approach may open a new avenue to generate broadband and robust comb generation at high repetition rates. Why does he love the United 570a42141b
