2009 No new features were added in this version. Autodesk said that all of the above features were added to the core functionality of AutoCAD, and then were made available to third-party developers to build add-ons to AutoCAD that would provide new features. These add-ons could be viewed and installed in the AutoCAD application, as well as the Windows, AutoCAD Architecture, AutoCAD Electrical, AutoCAD Civil 3D, AutoCAD LT, Inventor, Plant 3D, PowerBASIC and Revit applications.

2010 Autodesk announced AutoCAD X3D 2010. Autodesk said the main features in this version include: New 3D drawing capabilities that allow users to create and open 3D models such as inextensible model, Inventor, Revit, and 3D Studio Max file formats. New 3D modeling tools for creating and editing 3D models, including smart shapes, intelligent editing tools, tag-based search, and modeling in 3D Studio Max. New drawing and editing capabilities for creating 2D and 3D drawings and models. 3D printing support with 3D printing products in 2010 and AutoCAD Architecture, AutoCAD Electrical, AutoCAD LT, Autodesk 3ds Max, AutoCAD Civil 3D, AutoCAD Plant 3D, Inventor, and Revit applications. In addition to the main features, Autodesk announced several other new add-on products that are available for Autodesk Exchange Apps. These include: Solibri Software is a product that runs on all AutoCAD models. Move is a product that will allow users to move pieces of their drawing while maintaining their alignment. Retro is a product that will allow users to create an improved (retro) style of drawings. Boundary is a product that will allow users to convert 2D drawings into 3D drawings. Sustainability is a product that will allow users to create accurate representations of the industrial-scale buildings for which the AutoCAD applications are commonly used. There was also a Productivity update with some of the new features: New features that offer more efficiency, creativity and productivity in the way they are used, including: The ability to open a drawing, perform a query and be returned to the drawing with no lost work; The ability to quickly create or update a drawing by opening and creating a 1d647c40b

Cervical epidural abscess associated with bacterial vaginosis. We report the first case of cervical epidural abscess associated with bacterial vaginosis. A 31-year-old woman with no significant history presented with neck pain and myoclonus that did not resolve after 6 days of antibiotic therapy. She had no history of recent trauma or infection. An MRI of the cervical spine showed multiple abscesses involving the epidural space in the C2 and C3 to C6 levels. CT-guided fine needle aspiration of the abscess and subsequent tissue culture showed a growth of lactobacillus species. She underwent immediate surgical evacuation of the epidural abscess and decompressive laminectomy of the C5 to C7 level. The patient had excellent postoperative neurological recovery, and no relapse has occurred during a 14-month follow-up period.

Analysis of total and intact parathyroid hormone in serum and urine using a combination of immunofunctional and radioimmunoassays. We have developed and validated a two-step method for the measurement of both total and intact parathyroid hormone in serum and urine. The first step involved a first immunofunctional assay (IFLA) measuring total parathyroid hormone. This was followed by a second immunoradiometric assay (IRMA) measuring intact parathyroid hormone. The validity of this assay was confirmed by the precise parallelism of the calibrators of both assays. The total parathyroid hormone reference range in serum was 6.4 to 38.1 ng/L (2.1 to 12.0 pmol/L). The intact parathyroid hormone reference range in serum was 1.2 to 5.3 pmol/L. Serum concentrations were reduced in 29 of the 30 cases of primary hyperparathyroidism (sensitivity, 98.6%). Furthermore, a single determination of intact parathyroid hormone in a urine sample provides a specific diagnosis of primary hyperparathyroidism. In addition, in chronic renal failure the total and intact parathyroid hormone concentrations were reduced. This assay improves diagnostic accuracy in the management of primary hyperparathyroidism and other forms of parathyroid disease.
