Debate (Wine) Debate is a type of wine grape cultivated in the Drenthe region of the Netherlands. Traditionally, it was a relatively coarse wine grape suitable to make strong, coarse-textured wines such as "jenever". Today, the wine from Debate is mostly used for dry table wine production, although not as much as the table wine grape Rotkohl, and historically has been mixed with other grapes to avoid the higher taxes that were levied on grape wine when it was still a relatively new grape. Recent attempts to produce soft, honeyed wines from Debate have been a success, although the wine still needs to pass the strict final judgement of the NV Wijnbrand to be allowed for this purpose.

History and Characteristics Debate grapes were first planted in the Drenthe region in 1912, in the village of Amsterdam. A strong, coarse wine that was very close in character to rum was generally produced from the grapes. Until the end of the 20th century, Debate was the most important table wine grape in the Netherlands and made up approximately 25% of all table wine production. For many years, the wine from Debate was allowed to co-ferment with the table wine grape Rotkohl, and many varieties of rot-resistant wild grapes were used as the base for the co-fermentations. In recent years, the use of wild grapes for vinification has diminished, as Rotkohl has begun to supplant these. Recent developments in Debate cultivation have been directed towards producing soft, honeyed wines. Softness is obtained by allowing fermentation to proceed on the skins of the grapes; this is accompanied by the addition of some pectins or polysaccharides from the grapes themselves. In 2001, the wine from Debate received permission from the NV Wijnbrand to be called "Wineries in the Netherlands" (,), since the wine is now fermented on the whole grape and not just on the skins. Semiconductor devices are found in many products in the fields of entertainment, communications, networks, computers, and household markets. Semiconductor devices are also found in military, aviation, automotive, industrial controllers, and office equipment. The semiconductor devices perform a variety of electrical functions necessary for each of these applications. The manufacture of semiconductor devices involves formation of a wafer having a plurality of die. Each semiconductor die contains hundreds or thousands of transistors and other active and passive devices performing a variety of electrical functions. For a given wafer, each die from the wafer typically performs the same electrical function. Front-end manufacturing generally refers to formation of the semiconductor devices on the wafer. The finished wafer has an active side containing the transistors and other active and passive components. Back-end manufacturing refers to cutting or singulating the finished wafer into the individual die and then packaging the die for structural support and environmental isolation. One of the goals of the semiconductor industry is to continue shrinking the size of the die and thereby increase the density of the devices on the smaller die. However, as the demand for increased density continues, other issues have begun to arise. For example, as devices become more crowded, it becomes more difficult to add new features or devices without adversely impacting the overall size of the die.Q: How can I move all the code after a certain line in Python? I have a Python function which looks like this: def function(x, y): # all of the code # some lines # new code I want to be able to extract the code between # new code and return it with the original code 3e33713323
