According to the State Council's information Office, China is aiming to transform to a paperless society by 2025. This year marks the 40th anniversary of China's paperless office policy and the countdown to the paperless society will be further extended. In accordance with the decision made by the 13th Five-Year Plan period, a lot of government departments, enterprises and associations have set targets for replacing paper with digital information by the end of this year. The latest plan is to cut paper consumption by 10% in the 13th Five-Year Plan period by promoting and facilitating the use of paperless information systems, according to the information office. It also encourages enterprises to install digital information systems, and by 2020 the number of enterprises installing them will reach half a million. It will also reduce 35 million pieces of waste paper generated in the 13th Five-Year Plan period by encouraging the use of paperless information systems. With the goal of making paper free by 2025, China has been making great strides in improving the energy efficiency and eliminating paper in our lives. In February, Huawei launched its flexible display called "Poly Eye" with the technology used in large-scale live-streaming. The new display has the largest folding angle, and supports both 2D and 3D videos. In July, a team from the UK and Poland launched a world-first business card which can be read on mobile phones and computers, linking up with new devices. Previously, the most popular high-definition thermal printer uses wire ribbons to print images onto paper. But for this new design, the print head is covered with a flexible polymer film like the ones used for screens. This means the paper is flat, allowing it to be super-thin. Earlier this year, Chinese car manufacturer BYD launched a new battery, which combines high-speed charging and high 6d1f23a050
