Full.Toward Rapid Biodegradation of Organic Contaminants Using Microbes and in situ Controlled Photocatalytic Reactions. In situ photodegradation of recalcitrant organic contaminants plays an important role in bioremediation, but it is greatly limited by insufficient mineralization of contaminants and rapid degradation of microorganisms in natural environments. We designed bifunctional materials with light-induced reactions and microbe-mediated reactions. This strategy allowed simultaneous metal-catalyzed cleavage of contaminants and biodegradation of contaminants. The integration of biodegradation and photodegradation could dramatically increase the efficiency of bioremediation. # 20% rule ## Overview Developers utilizing this library should implement only the minimum of functionality, and not hesitate to request changes in the public API. The philosophy is to provide an API with a minimum of error handling and reliability guarantees, and defer most cases of error handling and reliability to the framework, and similar code to verify specific hypotheses (e.g. verify appropriate data exist, that the input is formatted, etc.). ## Usage
