Pages October 12, 2015 The Big Race in Utrecht The Big Race is a fun race for a group of about twenty people taking part in the race that is held on a Sunday in October. In this "sprint to the sea" we have to run 12 km in the streets of Utrecht. The last 2 km are barefoot running but it was only a 5 km run instead of a 10 km run for the other stages of the race. The other "sport" is the "radials". To get to the race we have to catch a tram to the Rotterdamseweg. The "sprint to the sea" is really fun. One thing I got to know on the race was the "pre-race". The pre-race food you get for free in the Imperial Cafe and it is really tasty. because without creativity, you end up with lists and analysis and a random-seeming. But it seems to me that in the art world, there is way more opportunity for virtue signaling, than there is for encouraging talent. I'm not saying one's success doesn't also encourage one to become a better artist. I'm saying that it seems that in the art world, the standards are lower. It's probably a combination of all of these things. Not wanting to have to work hard, wanting easy wins, etc. I'd guess that the argument for art being a meritocracy is something to do with the fact that, if you are rich, you can then easily buy a way to rise in the world. This article is quite good but I think the notion that a painting should
